

PACIFIC WEST CONSTRUCTION

With a great passion for the construction industry and a desire to bring true quality to every project, Lynden Kunde has built Pacific West Construction (PWC) in Idaho Falls into a family-owned and operated business with a solid foundation.

“And that foundation is our dedication to quality and our customer’s complete satisfaction,” says Kunde. “We love and demand quality for our customers and it is our one goal for every project we take on.”

Being a true family business, Kunde’s sons, Jason and Justin, are both following in their father’s footsteps. Having grown up around and worked in the construction industry all their lives, they have become an integral part of the company alongside their father. Both serve as project managers running office operations and working closely with their core members in the field.

Pacific West Construction was founded in 1989 when Kunde—at the time a highly-regarded and respected estimator in Idaho Falls—began to recognize the demand for a contractor Dedicated to Quality. Though work was scarce at first, the PWC reputation grew quickly. Today, PWC has completed more than $200 million worth of work on a broad range of projects to include hospitals, churches, lodges, libraries, schools, hotels, multifamily dwellings and magnificent custom log homes.

The company’s flagship project as a custom builder was Flagg Ranch Resort Lodge—a breath-taking resort in northwestern Wyoming. This project further fueled Pacific West’s reputation and popularity throughout Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana making custom-built, multimillion dollar homes and residential developments the company’s specialty. The past two years they have been involved in remodeling and preserving Historic Downtown Idaho Falls, including the Earl Building, Pachangas, and Idahoan. They have taken an active approach specializing in Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design or LEED development projects, building two multifamily projects in Idaho Falls and having received the highest award of LEED Platinum Certification, making them Idaho’s first LEED developer. They continue to be a leader in this field.
